An Investigation Into the Vagaries of Local Addressing Issues

Track: State and Local Government

Author(s): Albert Hill

County government uses addresses for a plethora of purposes, from issuing permits to E911 dispatch. Unfortunately these myriad applications (whether paper or digital) are often quite independent of one another and created without regard to standardization or efficiency. What can a jurisdiction do when it finally realizes that a dozen address databases are too many? How can they be automated and cross referenced to ensure the accuracies each inherently have are maintained? This paper will discuss these issues and present how Seminole County, Florida currently creates and maintains address data.
